Some 2500 years ago a spaceship landed in the Middle East. The Commander taught a group of local inhabitants how to build ships, gave them a compass and persuaded them to leave Jerusalem and sail to South America. There they built a small-scale copy of the Temple of Solomon, following the instructions of their 'god.' When the building was completed, the Commander flew back to Babylon and carried off the prophet Ezekiel to show him the new temple. What he saw can be read by anyone in the Old Testament Book of Ezekiel. Incredible? Nothing but the truth, declares von Daniken, for he himself found the temple in the jungle-clad Sierra Nevada of Colombia and was the first European to photograph the 'eighth wonder of the world', a terraced city once inhabited by 300,000 Indians.
