Fly Hard 2 Patrick D. Gallaher

On October 5, 1914, during the First World War, a French Voisin patrol aircraft engaged and shot down a German scout plane over the Western Front. This event marked the first ever air-to-air dogfight in history and turned the sky itself into a battlefield. In the hundred plus years since World War I the fighter aircraft has evolved from a crop duster biplane that fought at close range into a flying missile platform that can kill its enemies from beyond the horizon. But the pilots who have flown in them have had to fight for their own survival in brutal twisting and turning battles for control of the sky. Now you're in the cockpit as we dive into the largest and most hard-fought air battles ever waged. Throttle up, check six, and Fly Hard.
