Excerpt:

Something was happening nearby, and Worcester wasn't going to be around much longer. Not like it used to be, at least. It would start with someone noticing something unlikely – an old friend would show up, you might find a cigarette lighter that you lost years ago, you might be singing a song only to turn on the radio and find that song playing. There was a relationship between how improbable an event was and the likelihood of being taken. A little coincidence here or there might not be a big thing, but they could add up.
